NOAH RUST

A Thruway Ramble

I wonder if I could build a house out of the things on the side of a thruway.
The rocks by an aunt's house, shards of broken glass, spare tires, metal from street signs, wildflowers, or those from someone's roadside garden, panel tile of a sidewalk, a stuffed animal, the wind stolen from a child's grasp, plastic grocery bags with red smiley faces saying thank you, thank you, thank you, bottle caps beside mismatched bottles, an empty, grease-stained McDonald's fry cup, dog toenail clippings, PVC pipes from a water park sold to a regular homeowner, cigarette butts, shed snakeskin, a still and disemboweled fawn, and every other footprint we forget we leave behind.
