Up On A Star

In a world where fathers didn't wear their capes everywhere but home.
Stitched with the force of the blue, blood of red,
and beliefs of the white.

In a world where mothers did not live on the line of my doorway, dragging poorly sewn suitcases, spilling festering words and empty memories.

In a world where dreams are closer than graves,
and voices are taught to be cherished.

I wish.
