Riverdirge

Frances Sharples

SUNY Geneseo

Follow this and additional works at: https://knightscholar.geneseo.edu/gandy-dancer

Part of the Poetry Commons

Recommended Citation

This Poetry is brought to you for free and open access by KnightScholar. It has been accepted for inclusion in Gandy Dancer Archives by an authorized editor of KnightScholar. For more information, please contact KnightScholar@geneseo.edu.
Riverdirge

I don’t want to hold anymore — the children that pull up that grass, the babies that swallow that moss, the men who drink up that river, the women who caress me and wish to swallow me whole, if quietly. I want to find it somewhere that is not here — my body, this earth, some extraterrestrial hill where I can be quiet alone and think about it, all something else. Mud cradled in the fingernails of a creature with love in its throat; antenna between front teeth; ocean gravel stuck to the palm that slaps me from behind. I am sick of dragging, of everything running through me when I am the mother of the world. From river hillside I am something covered in skin, sure, covered in shore, in wet, crashing, growth, melting, cascade, crest, breast and valley. Mother, would you make me in your image? a planet that holds so much in itself.